GRACENOTES

Black Friday

We get cute with our catch phrases. Suddenly the Friday after Thanksgiving becomes known by war language. Merchants try to make us feel we must do battle that day or the “good” stuff will all be taken. Black Friday is now followed by Cyber-Monday. You need to be prepared to jump online at D-time or you will lose and be a shopping failure.

Military personnel should be offended that commerce has requisitioned serious communications wording. There are days that are really black. There were Fridays that were not about acquisition of surplus goods but about survival. When men and women defended causes and laid down their lives. That would make for a Black Friday.

Historically there is only one Black Friday. You know the day well. The Friday that heard the nails and saw the crown of thorns. The Friday that listened to the thieves and watched the Lamb die. That was Black Friday. That was the day sin was attacked. The day Satan received his fatal blow. The day God watched the fulfillment of a pre-historic plan. When the angels who declared the glorious birth were silent as Jesus breathed his last.

Black Friday now is designed to create an urgency in the economy. To boost sales and make marketing goals.

THE Black Friday should create a genuine urgency. “What shall we do?” is every sinner’s tactical plea. You see we have the good news of Victory Sunday to change the story. The communique arrived that the enemy was defeated. Death could not hold Jesus. Black Friday was a historic battle that left interpretation hanging for three days. Victory Sunday changed everything. Angels rejoiced. Saints were amazed. God was pleased on Friday so He pleased Himself on Sunday. God’s holy justice allowed Him to tell death to let His SON go.
